Moving beyond the survival instinct :

Taking Social Responsibility

It's simple to become enmeshed in the maelstrom of our own lives in a world where individual hobbies and personal aspirations are prioritized. We are compelled to put our immediate needs and wellbeing first by the survival instinct, a deeply embedded mechanism in us.

However, there is a growing demand for us to transcend this instinct and embrace social duty as society develops and becomes more intertwined than ever before.

We must go past this limited perspective and adopt social responsibility if we are to truly flourish as a society. It entails accepting responsibility for the results of our decisions and actively looking for methods to positively impact our communities and the wider world. In order to transcend the survival instinct, one must change their point of view from "me" to "we."

Prakriti Secretariat is a program initiated by DPS Dwarka Expressway to teach students the value of acting on their dedication to sustainability and ecology. It's a student project that works with five different cells to support five different components of nature. The cells in question are:

- Sapling Collective
- Water vault
- Climate cell
- Waste to wealth corporation
- Energy Bank

The sustainability programs at our school have a huge impact. By fostering socially and environmentally responsible people, we help to create a world where sustainable practices are the rule rather than the exception. The ideals instilled in our students by these programs will influence policy, spur innovation, and motivate others to join the movement towards a greener, more sustainable society as they mature into responsible citizens and leaders.

Our school sets an example by embracing sustainability as a fundamental principle and educating students to be environmental stewards, ensuring that the seeds of change we sow today will continue to grow and thrive in future generations.
